my child is at Springdale Infant School. As long as the children are educated and are happy I don't mind. Key Stages are important, Curriculum, easy transition is and covering pupils who are already in the schools for transitioning up to junior school from infant school. Teachers with wide range of key stages are good. Saving money is good because no school can ever get full funding. Trips are nice with full information for transitions. Feeling like they are people persons schools, child friendly and family schools. I would not want to have my children at all different schools because there was no room due to change. This would be an advantage we have to apply 3 times for places as these schools transition to high school would be nice with more transition information. My child does her levels and has some small grouping help it works and she has friends.

based should be scrutinised for failing schools such as Springdale. Ofsted are very contradictory, how can they assess junior school in 2014 and the infants in 2016 ??? Two year gap and ~~staff~~ KEY! staff members have left since, that's a joke at best by Ofsted. And Ofsted have the ~~authority~~ ordacity to review mark the infants as improvement needed. ~~How far~~ A school separate or not should be already helping each others performance naturally. There are in same building. I believe the school doesn't have to merge to improve. There's obviously a lack of communication between the two schools when there shouldn't be there are in same building. I think the education based should look at more productive ways to improve staff teachers knowledge giving teachers the real skills needed. There's a skill gap between "no longer there experienced staff" and today's modern staff. Fill the skill gap to improve leadership organisation and performance. More regular reviews of performance is needed. (One review every 18 months).
